"I am not the enemy please stop hurting me. Please take down my name and my picture. If you keep this up I'll just give up this biomass fight and delete my blog. If you really care about stopping biomass you will stop going out of your way to hurt me. I've taken down everything of yours just like you asked so stop hurting me. All you are doing is discouraging me from fighting biomass. Is that what you really want?

You're in my kill filter and have been for sometime so I will not see anything you send me but I will see if you take down my picture. Please I'm begging you, just leave me alone, don't steal my stuff and stop hurting me. You are causing me and my family extreme distress. Please stop!"

[SLAPP/DOS Harassment/Vacuous Threat to Seek a Restraining Order via Perjury?]

"That TOS has been there for months. You need to learn to read what you sign. Your ISP has been contacted. Don't make me get a no contact order." -Mossy Mom, aka:Shawnie Vedder-

Shawnie has MANY aliases, many accounts...I don't know why or care. One that caught my eye she used on my community Blog:
manhater@gmail.com

I don't know that such an e-mail address even exists, but it's the one she used.

Yes, I now question what's going on upstairs...whatever it is, it's beyond my control. But I'm not going to be browbeat by it/her either.

I can make 'fair use' of 'copyrighted' material, as I have here. Can I "deep link" to someone else's website or blog post?

Yes. Most people are happy to have other websites link to them. Indeed, "permalinks" for each blog post, to which others can link directly, are one of the features that have helped blogs and blog conversations take off. But some website owners complain that deep links — links that lead readers to an internal page on a website — “steal” traffic to the homepage or disrupt the intended flow of their websites.

For example, Ticketmaster has argued that other sites should not be permitted to send browsers directly to Ticketmaster event listings. Ticketmaster settled a claim against Microsoft and lost a suit it had brought against Tickets.com over deep linking.

See Ticketmaster v. Tickets.com.

So far, the courts have found that deep links to web pages are neither copyright infringement nor trespass. No court has enforced a website’s terms of use that bar deep linking.

“Clearly you are not opposed to biomass and your only real goal is to hurt me and my family by causing me great emotional distress and suffering. Ok you win. I’m dropping out of the biomass fight. I removed all of your stuff that I could find and still you persist in stealing my photo and hogging my bandwidth.

Fine, do all your legal maneuvering take joy in your great victory, over a helpless poverty stricken family with a terminally ill breadwinner and a medically fragile teenager, take joy in taking the joy out of my artwork, the one thing that brings me relief from my haunted childhood, but know that you have deeply wounded me and my family. But you won, so I guess that is all that matters.

I'm not strong enough to fight you so I give up and I'm leaving. My blog and all my photos, will be coming down today, unless something happens to convince me that I should keep it up."

It's been said, Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned. That *is* what's going on here! Don't just take my word for the 'issues' Shawnie has (which I have nothing to do with) but do your own Google search on terms like:

'schizo' 'manhater' 'shawnie vedder' 'shawnie whelan' 'mossy mom', csxii@schizoaffective.org, csx@schizoaffective.org, catfishii@schizoaffective.org, or the various aliases and e-mail accounts listed further above, etc.

Frankly, despite all this, I can't help liking Shawnie. She's an original critical thinker when she's rational. Her children are charming. Her husband is an English Gentleman...though with bad health. Shawnie is a great photo-journalist and passionate about the environment. I love her for all those reasons and more. Unfortunately, she hasn't turned out to be a very good/loyal friend.

Shawnie, I'm pleased you liked the flower bouquet you discovered I left at your home. I'm sorry you didn't have the fortitude to allow your expressed appreciation online to remain after checking your surveillance cameras, or your commentary about Mr. Hupp, and any number of other online observations you've made/parodied. But to put it bluntly in your own words, "I am NOT the enemy!" Try to get over it. Or as Dayhike Mike on NWhikers.net so pointedly suggested, try not to be an attention whore.

Apparently (according to Google inquiries) Shawnie has had some bad experiences in her prior relationships (a sample is listed below) indicating sophistication on how to manipulate perceived 'authority' figures, e.g. Becky Penoyar as an e-list host, whatever your ISP might be, websites, ex parte protection orders, etc. Moreover, she may have serious mental/emotional health issues...not that illness is a 'crime'. But neither is it an 'excuse'.

According to web based posts, Shawnie receives SSDI benefits. That's a federal Social Security program for those who are so disabled, they cannot earn a living or provide for themselves. It's well known Shawnie is fit enough to hike the Olympics extensively while shooting photos of her trips. She's more physically fit than I (young enough to be my daughter) as well as being very bright and well educated. But a person may be physically able while remaining mentally/emotionally disabled. That's an easy explanation of how someone so apparently healthy can qualify for SSDI benefits.

Some have unwittingly attempted to take up the cudgel for Shawnie. They serve as enablers. Others have criticized me for defending myself. This response is for the public record and any who care to inquire as to the details. As I've been unsuccessful in avoiding Shawnie's threats, harassment, and manipulation of some of my oldest friends, I refer you to but one of hundreds of such internet posts by Shawnie, et al, at:

“SHAWNIE’S STORY:” [as it appears in the above web address]

“Why do I post these articles?”

I am not anti-med and I am not a scientologist. I think that there is a place for these medicines and I still take medications. But not SSRI's.

I do this is because in 1998 my HMO allowed my General Practitioner to Prescribe the powerful anti-depressant Paxil to me with no diagnosis. (Later my HMO pdoc screwed up and prescribed too much Risperdal and added to my problems.)

After 4 weeks on Paxil I went into a terrible mixed manic episode. The result was that I began to have violent SSRI induced fantasies I was very afraid that I was going to murder a man.

I went back to my family doctor and told him that as a child I had been diagnosed with bipolar disorder and spent ages 16-18 as a ward of the court.

I also told him that I felt I was losing my mind because I was feeling homicidal and I was stalking a non HMO therapist that had sexually abused me years ago.

I told my family doctor that I was afraid I was going to murder this man. I told my family doctor that I did not feel at all epressed. My family doctor noted in my chart that I was in a "cheerful" mood.

My family doctor responded by doubling my dose of Paxil. I feel that he should have referred me to a psychiatrist possibly should have had me hospitalized and perhaps had a legal obligation to warn the man that I was stalking. (later a hospital refused to release me until this man had been warned, the hospital followed the law, the hospital is not part of my HMO)
But he did none of those things. Instead he doubled my Paxil dose to 40mg
per day.
